I have now editied the OCR'd copy of the magazine articles that I found online and corrected formattin/spelling errors as well as labelling all the accompanying pictures to correspond with the correct figures in the articles.

I have also started to create a website about the Elektor vocoder as there doesn't seem to be much in existence already. This may tale a while though as my experience with HTML is very little and i still haven't worked out if CSS is a good thing or a bad thing as it seems very easy to screw up a page very quicly with just a missing  tag...
